

ACE - Army Careers Exhibition

The 'Start Thinking Soldier' touring careers exhibition visited barracks, air shows and careers fairs countrywide and we were responsible for sourcing and modifying a series of 6m by 6m standard shipping containers. Working with production manager Ian Watterson of Jack Morton Worldwide, each container was transformed into a specially designed interactive pod, complete with virtual reality experiences offering a unique insight into army life.

We undertook the scenic fit out as well as installing the required internal infrastructure. Entrance and exit doors were added to each container along with small windows, whilst internally, the containers were made ready for the fitting of a variety of specially commissioned interactive and virtual reality consoles.

We installed mains electrical distribution to each container to supply various power points within, while heating, air conditioning and lighting were also provided. We utilised our vast workshop space to make short work of the paintwork, lining up the six containers before re-spraying them twice, inside and out, in army green. Each container was fitted with a false timber floor with a rubber finish and the walls were clad and painted. Graphic panels were produced and then fitted to both the interior and exterior of each container.
